In the days of the open range on the central and northern Great Plains, cattle from Texas were driven north to graze on the public domain lands and Indian territories of western Kansas, Nebraska, the Dakotas, Montana and Wyoming.
Cattle from different outfits often intermingled and grazed together on the vast unfenced land. At round ups, cattlemen would join together to sort out their brands and "reps" from each outfit would bring their best cow ponies to cut their cattle out of the herd.

Although the days of the true open range are long past, cattle still roam huge expanses of land on the high plains, and a good cow horse is regarded as a cowboy's or cowgirl's most valuable tool in working cattle on the range.
